

Light Up Your Life

With some pairings, the whole is greater than the sum of its parts. Tango and Cash. Tuna and mayo. Now comes this marriage made in heaven: the new Dalmore Cigar by Alec Bradley (alecbradley.com) and the Dalmore Cigar Malt Reserve ($125, thedalmore.com), a great Highland single malt—each made specifically for the other.

Shell Game

Want to eat the same oysters served at some of the finest kitchens in the world (Per Se in New York, the French Laundry in Napa Valley, even the White House) while watching the Final Four in your underwear at home? Island Creek will ship you beauties grown by the best farmers, mostly in the Cape Cod area. This bag of 100 goes for $150 at islandcreekoysters.com.

On the Road

As the J.J. Cale tune goes, "See the sun come up in Georgia, go down in New Orleans / Never get to know a woman, 'cept to get in her jeans / Sometimes we make money, sometimes we don't know / Thirteen days with five to go." That's life on the road, playing the blues. Go in style with these guitar ($215) and LP cases ($105, brixton.com) made by Brixton in partnership with Fender. Like J.J., they're eternally cool.

Motor City Loses Its Engine

Thanks to some fin de siècle tinkers and their internal combustion engine, Detroit was the city where the age of coal and steam ended. Now Steven Bock is taking Motor City in a different direction by ditching the motor. Bock founded the Detroit Bicycle Company in 2010, producing hand-made bikes with high-end parts and vintage add-ons and naming them after Detroit roads. Pictured: the Madison Street ($3,600, detroitbicyclecompany.com). Henry Ford would be proud.
